

EPISODIC DESCRIPTIONS

DOWNING OF A FLAG

Part One:

Long description:

Approximately 400 characters

Through interviews, archived footage and photographs, the Confederate Battle flag's history, meaning and impact are examined, from its creation and adoption during the American Civil War; to its resurrection over the South Carolina State House in 1961; to its use as a symbol by Dylan Roof, who, in 2015, killed nine Black parishioners at the historic Mother Emanuel AME Church in Charleston, S.C.

Medium description:

Approximately 240 characters

The Confederate Battle flag's history and impact are examined, from its adoption during the Civil War to its resurrection over the South Carolina State House in 1961 to its use as a symbol by Dylan Roof, who, in 2015, killed nine Black parishioners in Charleston, S.C.

Short description:

Approximately 150 characters

From its adoption during the Civil War to its use as a symbol by racially motivated killer Dylan Roof in 2015, the Confederate flag's history and impact are examined.

Part Two:

Long description:

Approximately 400 characters

The horror of the Orangeburg Massacre and lack of attention it received provide context for the era in which the Confederate Battle flag was first raised over the South Carolina State House. Efforts throughout history to remove the flag from the grounds of the State House are explored. Nine days after the Charleston church shooting, President Barack Obama delivers a memorable eulogy; two weeks later, the flag is removed.

Medium description:

Approximately 240 characters

Efforts throughout history to remove the Confederate Battle flag from the grounds of the South Carolina State House are explored. Nine days after the Charleston church shooting, President Barack Obama delivers a memorable eulogy; two weeks later, the flag is removed.

Short description:

Approximately 150 characters

Efforts to remove the Confederate Battle flag from the grounds of the South Carolina State House are explored. Twenty-three days after the Charleston church shooting, the flag is removed.